Speaker Profile

ABOUT TAMARA

Tamara Meyer is a speaker, educator, and dialogue facilitator whose work is rooted in her German Jewish legacy as the child of Holocaust survivors, including a Kindertransport survivor. Drawing on personal story and historical memory, she confronts hate, encourages meaningful conversation, and creates opportunities for education, reconciliation, and peacebuilding.

Her journey has included dialogue work in Berlin with Holocaust survivors, former Nazis, and their descendants—experiences that shaped her commitment to engaging across profound historical and ideological divides.

For more than 25 years, Tamara has helped bring greater awareness to the Kindertransport rescue missions, which brought thousands of Jewish children to safety before the outbreak of World War II. Her work has included conferences, educational panels, media outreach, and the development of a global community of descendants, scholars, host-family members, and students. Today, she teaches nationally and internationally about this little-known chapter of Holocaust history.

Tamara's work also explores antisemitism, extremism, reconciliation, and the power of dialogue to build bridges across ideological divides. She collaborates with race-relations expert Daryl Davis and former white nationalist Arno Michaelis, offering programs including Dismantling Antisemitism and Dismantling Hate.

Through these programs, she examines practical antidotes to antisemitism and hate while creating space for understanding, accountability, and meaningful human connection.

Using memory, dialogue, and lived legacy to confront hate and build understanding across divides.

PUBLICATIONS & CONTRIBUTIONS

Tamara is the author of Help Your Baby Build a Healthy Body and a contributor to Journeys of Transformation: Confronting the Legacies of Conflict, War and Genocide. She is currently writing a book about her German Jewish background and path toward reconciliation.
